

Donations Through CIPHER

Working With The Community

A few touching gestures in our calls

A mother and daughter pair, who wanted to donate their long hair to making wigs for cancer patients rather than make it a religious donation

A grandmother, who lost her grandchild to cancer, wished to donate blankets to other children afflicted by cancer

Cancer Helpline has become synonymous with helping individuals affected by cancer.

This also means that people who have had cancer and recovered successfully, get in touch with us to assess ways in which they can contribute to helping others with cancer. Sometimes, in the unfortunate event of a loved one having passed away due to cancer, family members or friends reach out to us to identify ways in which they can help contribute towards cancer as a cause.

We get several calls where people express their interest in contributing to various forms including donations of cash and kind.

A lot of people call us with Remembrance Day donations where they choose institutions of their choice.

Would you like to organise a donation for an institution that works in the space of cancer?

How does CIPHER help?

Often, when people call us, they are unaware of whom to approach to complete the process of donations. In all these cases, we are not beneficiaries of the donations; instead, we connect the dots.

If someone wants to offer donations or volunteer time, we find the right institution to facilitate for the requirement.

In the space of cancer, we strongly believe that it is not what an individual donates, but the thought that counts. We appreciate and encourage that thought and use it as yet another means of bringing people together.

These initiatives help in creating a larger community around cancer.
